

2012 ANNUAL HIGHLIGHTS

The local touch.

For the last 90 years, a big component of First National's success has been our experience, and knowledge of the opportunities and challenges presented by our state's economy. No one knows Alaska like we do, and this local expertise has helped transform us into a community bank with the strength of $3.0 billion in assets.

Every transaction, from the smallest depositor to the largest loan customer, begins with a person-to-person connection. These local relationships are the bedrock of First National's success, because they translate into customers who appreciate the convenience, service and value that we bring to the table.

First National's Healy Branch served its community and Alaska with distinction. The U.S. Mint asked the branch, the only banking services provider in the area, to be the official exchange bank for the release of the new Denali National Park Quarter. Immediately after the launch by the mint and the National Park Service, enthusiasts from across the state and the Lower 48 lined up at the branch to be the first in the nation to get the new quarter. The branch exchanged 12,000 quarters in an hour and a half.

Like the one in Healy, the bank's other 29 branches are a tangible, visible expression of First National's involvement in the communities we serve. It's just one more example of how the local touch plays an important role in the everyday lives of our customers and their personal and business success.

We know that Alaska isn't just one economy – every region, every community has its own character that makes local knowledge not just desirable, but essential to the success of a business. Only those who live and work in these communities, like we do, really understand their distinctive elements.

The local touch. It's an important part of the bottom line for our customers and our bank. Important enough to put it in our name. We're First National Bank Alaska.

Making a difference locally

Chairman's Message

Fiscal year 2012 began with celebration of our bank's 90th anniversary. I am proud of the exclamation point we put on this milestone year with continued growth and strong income performance. These results generated value for shareholders, customers, employees, and communities served across this great state. Our bank's total year-end assets exceeded the $3.0 billion mark, customer deposits exceeded $2.5 billion, and loans to Alaskans exceeded $1.2 billion — all for the first time. Net income of $40.0 million exceeded 2011 net income of $34.8 million by 15 percent. Our capital level, exceeding $460 million, continues to place us among the strongest of all national banks. First National's strength and security will help us provide consistent, high quality banking services to Alaskans for many more decades.

In June, the bank completed the deregistration process for its common stock. Accordingly, we were able to reduce the staff time and other external resources required for public company shareholder reporting. Resources previously devoted to "rear view mirror" reporting have been redirected to higher-value activities. This forward-looking action will improve our budgeting and forecasting capabilities, interest rate modeling, and profitability analyses, driving improvement in future shareholder value.

After deregistration, the bank's common stock continued to trade over the counter and the share repurchase program was unaffected. Quarterly and annual financial performance is reported and posted on the bank's website for shareholder information.

The banking industry operates in a challenging environment. Low interest rates reduce operating margins from core banking activities; the regulatory environment adds cost to even the best-managed banks. First National Bank Alaska operates on a solid banking model that favors sound fundamental performance, effective risk management, strong sources of noninterest income and effective operating cost oversight. These fundamentals serve all stakeholders well. I'm pleased to share that just recently the bank was included in "America's 100 Most Trustworthy Companies" by Forbes Magazine, reinforcing what our customers, employees, and shareholders already know.

Financial highlights

In its 90th year, First National Bank Alaska reached a number of financial milestones, recording all-time highs in assets, loans, and deposits, maintaining its position as one of the nation's strongest banks.

Assets topped $3.0 billion for the first time in bank history, growing by $145.4 million, a 5 percent increase. Loan growth was stronger than anticipated in 2012, climbing to $1.2 billion, a $97.4 million increase over last year. Deposits with repurchase agreements grew to $2.5 billion, a 5 percent improvement, with increases statewide.

Net income rose to $40.0 million, up 15 percent over 2011. Significant increases in deposit and loan volumes offset the effects of continued low interest rates, leading to a strong year for the bank.

The focus on increased loan portfolio quality paid off for shareholders by limiting bank charge-offs. Indeed, in 2012, the bank had net recoveries instead of loan losses.

Non-interest income held steady, thanks in large part to the outstanding performance in mortgage loan origination. Number of loans increased by 67 percent last year over the previous year, and dollar volume of loans grew 76 percent to $307.7 million. Non-interest expense decreased with senior management's focus on increased efficiencies.

Until questions about resource development are answered, the trajectory of Alaska's economy remains an area of concern across the state. Many customers report cautious optimism but still hold a "wait-and-see" attitude. Against this backdrop, bank management and directors remain confident that First National has the strategies in place to succeed as we head toward the bank's century mark, offering Alaskans banking services with a "local touch."

Loan Officer Jenny Mahlen of Golden Valley Branch in Fairbanks discusses banking services with Rita Bishop, a 30-year customer, and co-owner of Bishop's Jewelry Gallery with her husband, Bill. The business turns precious metals into custom jewelry for their clientele.

Mining activity, along with North Slope support work and steady federal and state spending in the area, contributed to a good year in the Fairbanks region, with loans and deposits up 17 and 19 percent respectively.

Senior Vice President and Regional Manager Bill Renfrew looks forward to good things from the Healy Branch, saying "the bank is starting to enjoy the benefits of our willingness to open a branch in Healy."

Major construction of the new North Star Branch, injecting more than $2.1 million into the local economy, took place in 2012, with the opening early in 2013 on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson. The branch boasts the latest in staff and customer efficiencies and convenience, including the first customer kiosk for routine transactions.

Photo right: Loan Officer Jaime Kissner and Alaska Excursions owner Robert Murphy walk along the Juneau waterfront during the busy tourism season. Regional Manager Luke Fanning's strategy of maintaining attention on established clients, like those in the visitor industry, and expanding into new geographical areas and types of businesses resulted in a $10.8 million increase in loans.

First National's long-term commitment to convenience, service and value, already deeply ingrained in the bank's culture, was evident in performance and outcomes all across the bank.

Local touch generates growth

Ninety years of experience in the Alaska economy coupled with the flexibility to respond quickly to loan requests proved to be a real strength during 2012. Despite a highly competitive environment, First National's lending teams generated an 8 percent increase in loans over the previous year. A full 61 percent of the total increase in loans was realized in regions outside Anchorage, with increases of $42.8 million in Fairbanks, $15.8 million on the Kenai Peninsula, and $10.8 million in Alaska's Southeast region.

Corporate lenders enjoyed their own success, generating an uptick of $37 million in loans in Anchorage.

We know that living and working in the communities we serve gives our employees a unique knowledge of local economies, a valuable commodity customers appreciate and to which they respond. As Senior Vice President Doug Longacre put it, "Over and over we hear from our customers that they value the benefits we offer them as a community bank. They get fast decision-making from their banker—neighbors genuinely interested in their success and who understand their challenges. But they also have local access to a bank with the capital to meet their largest needs right now."

Strength undoubtedly also played a role in the deposit growth seen in 2012. Across Alaska, bank branches enjoyed increased deposits during the reporting period, with 67 percent of the total increase seen in branches outside Anchorage. First National consistently outperformed all other Alaska banks in deposit growth, a testament to the value of First National's position as one the nation's strongest and most secure financial institutions.

But loans and deposits are not the only services that attract and generate loyal customers. Customers expected easier access to their bank account information—whenever and wherever they wanted it. And that's what they got.

Increased customer convenience

During the year, teams of bank employees diligently worked to plan, implement and roll out a variety of service enhancements or additions to increase customer convenience and lead to greater customer satisfaction.

For instance, when the military base commissary in Anchorage moved to its current new location, bank management began looking for a site closer to where our customers were shopping and spending their time in order to better serve Alaska's military members, as we have for 70 years.

Groundbreaking for the bank's newest facility took place on Joint Base Elmendorf Richardson (JBER) in August 2012, with major construction occurring during the third and fourth quarters. The relocation of First National's existing branch, opened at the start of 2013 in a new building, made banking much more convenient for those living and working on JBER.

The new 3,950 square-foot branch building is located adjacent to the Joint Military Mall and Commissary and other businesses frequented by base personnel. With the new building comes a new branch name – the North Star Branch.

Another new offering allows customers to securely access personal account information and perform transactions through their now ever-present mobile devices. Named FNBApp, the latest and greatest technology deployed by the bank's experts turns customers' smartphones into their closest "branch."

Using a downloadable app, mobile web access, or text messaging—or all three—First National customers can check balances, transfer money between accounts, pay bills, and even find the closest friendly First National customer service desk, staffed by a real Alaskan, just by logging into their smartphones. The early 2013 roll-out of this highly popular form of banking was planned, developed and implemented by a cross-divisional team of knowledgeable bank employees during 2012's third and fourth quarters.

First National spent considerable time and resources last year enhancing and upgrading other electronic consumer and business banking services.

Enhanced service adds value

Besides a new look and easy-to-use screens, consumer online banking now offers more budgeting tools, improved Bill Pay, and e-Statements.

Enthusiastic branch employees personified the "Local Touch" when they introduced this enhanced suite of e-services wearing custom "Be More" t-shirts, and explaining how using the online banking services helps our Alaska neighbors "Be More" efficient, secure and green.

An upgrade to Business Online Banking delivered much more than a new look and feel. Business customers now enjoy access to multiple accounts from one screen, more account history, easier and faster user administration, along with expanded cash management tools.

The bank also substantially improved the bank-by-phone system, expanding menu options and upgrading technology.

First National expects to reap multiple rewards from this investment in technology. First, we expect to generate greater satisfaction and build increased loyalty among existing customers. We also intend to attract new customers by demonstrating that there's no substitute for the experience and commitment of the friendly Alaskans who provide the customer support, or "local touch," behind these electronic banking services. Finally, when customers take advantage of these tools to simplify and streamline their banking transactions, First National enjoys internal efficiencies that lead to long-term cost savings.

That's a win-win-win.

Employees bank wide helped spread the news about the convenience and security of our enhanced consumer online banking services. The "Be More..." campaign touted e-services such as improved Bill Pay, new budgeting tools, and e-Statements.
